
Electronic Data Interchange (EDI)

“EDI (Electronic Data Interchange) is commonly defined as computer-to-computer communication of business documents between companies.” It’s a paperless way that allows documents such as purchasing orders, invoices, financial reporting and etc to be transferred electronically. Many businesses choose EDI as a fast, inexpensive and safe mode of sending their documents. The benefits of EDI are:

- Improve data entry accuracy
- Faster data transfer
- Closer relationships with your trading partners
- Cost savings (Personnel reductions / Decrease of on-hand inventories)

Timewell has been providing quality EDI consulting services for most major industries. We have expertise in integrating EDI with most business systems including Oracle, SAP, JD Edwards, and more. Timewell can assist you whether you are installing your ERP system and need help with the EDI installation or you are setting up new EDI to your existing accounting systems. There are commonly two approaches to implementing EDI. Many larger organizations have their own EDI systems, often in association with their business partners. When your organization is small, you might need to adopt the system of your much larger business partner. We provide EDI compliance in the way that your partner requires it. Every business partner has unique EDI requirements. EDI compliance must be tested and approved. Timewell’s EDI service makes the process easy and painless. We handle everything - all of the mapping, transformation, testing requirements and etc for our clients. The other approach is to work with a VAN (Value Added Network) provider, which offers security, transaction services, and communication for EDI. Timewell provides EDI VAN service linking you to all your trading partners.

We have implemented hundreds of EDI applications from basic order entry to total Electric Commerce Integration. No matter what the size of your business is, we will make every effort to ensure all of your EDI needs and requirements are filled. Our clients appreciate our expertise, because it results in desired returns on their EDI investment.
